In today's "global village", lifestyles have become (a); often the American model has spread to other countries of the world. American sports, however, have not spread all over the world, as American films and American fashions have. On the contrary, European sports have been more successful internationally; European football, indeed, is slowly developing in the USA (where we call it "soccer").

Besides football and baseball, America of course has basketball – perhaps the most successful "export". Invented at Springfield College, Massachusetts, in 1891, basketball is quite certainly an "American game". Although it is not as big in Europe as in the USA, basketball has become much more popular in other countries than any other American team sport.

Why is America different?

The answer is simple. Until the 1960's, team sports were not played on a global scale. In Europe, people played European games, and in North America we played American games. The only real "global" sports were individual sports, such as golf and tennis.

A hundred years ago, individual rich Americans could travel to Europe on holiday, and play (1)these two games; but whole teams of sportsmen did not often travel around the world, it was too complicated and slow! The first worldwide sports competition was the Olympic Games; but originally the Olympics were only concerned with athletics; they did not include the wide variety of sports that they now cover.

So as far as team sports are concerned, America has grown up with its own tradition; we love our "football" and our baseball and basketball. (2)We don't mind if these sports are not popular in other countries. That way, we can organize the "World Series" baseball championship, knowing that a US team will almost always win. From time to time, a Canadian team wins...but they're North Americans too, after all.
