SEOUL (Reuters) — An android robot took the *podium in Seoul on June 30 to *conduct a performance by South Korea’s national orchestra, marking the first such attempt in the country.

The two-armed robot, designed by the Korea Institute of Industrial Technology, *made its debut at the National Theater of Korea. The robot, with a humanoid face, first bowed to the audience and started waving its arms to control the tempo of the live show.

Choi Soo-yeoul, who conducted *alongside the robot, was impressed with the *impeccable performance, but said the robot’s * “critical weakness” is that it cannot listen.

Robots and humans can * “co-exist and *complement rather than replace the other,” he added.

*podium 「指揮台」    *conduct 「指揮する」    *made its debut 「初登場した」
*alongside 「そばに」    *impeccable 「完璧な」    *critical weakness 「決定的な弱点」
*co-exist 「共存する」    *complement 「補足する」

- イ Choi Soo-yeoul 氏は、演奏の指揮を取るロボットには致命的な弱点があると指摘した。

問5 次の英文を読んで、下の問いに答えなさい。

There was a time, not so long ago, when the University of Tokyo was not just the top educational institute of Japan – it was considered so for the whole of Asia. In fact, when I entered the school in 2013, it still was the top Asian university at least on the ranking at the U.K.’s Times Higher Educational website.

However, by the time I graduated in 2017, in most university rankings, the National University of Singapore (NUS) *outranked Todai. People started asking me, “Do you regret going to Todai? Wouldn’t it have been better for you to stay in Singapore and go to NUS?”

My answer was no. The differences between the two schools are far greater than Aomori apples and tropical pineapples.

Todai accepts 3,000 undergraduate students each year for a country with a population of 120 million. On the other hand, NUS sees an annual *enrollment of around 7,300 for a country with a population of 5.7 million. ★A [ ア into Todai イ to NUS ウ extremely competitive エ to get オ in comparison カ it is ].

NUS students *gain recognition only when they get into *prestigious faculties or maintain excellent academic records. No one graduating from NUS in Singapore receives wide admiration in the same way as Todai students.

As far as I’m concerned, I was treated as a * “rarity” during my time there. Fewer than 50 undergraduate foreign students were taking lessons in Japanese, and I was one of the only two Singaporeans. In a sea of apples, any pineapple *stands out. ★B [ ア and job hunting イ that benefitted me ウ this rarity エ in networking オ it was ]. I would like to thank Today for giving me a *competitive edge over those graduates of NUS.

*outranked ~ 「～より順位が上になった」 *enrollment 「入学者数」 *gain recognition 「評価される」 *prestigious faculties 「有名な学部」 *rarity 「珍しい人(存在)」 *stand out 「目立つ」 *competitive edge over ~ 「～に対する優位性」
